

WELCOME

Did you know 90% of the choices you make as a Christian involve areas where Scripture says surprisingly little? What you wear, where you go, how you spend your free time—you won't find rules and strictures in the various spheres of evangelicalism, many of them unhelpful and even harmful (even in conservative circles). Of course Scripture forbids all clear-cut sins such as lying, cheating, stealing, murdering, or committing adultery. The Bible also clearly calls us to pursue Christ and grow in our faith. No Christian seriously questions whether he should read the Bible, pray, or tell others about Christ. Scripture is plain concerning those things. here is, however, one class of questions that seems to fall somewhere in the middle. These are the issues dealing with Christian freedom—things that fall between what God prohibits and what He commands. What entertainment is acceptable? What kind of music is okay? What can a Christian do or not do on Sunday? What about what you wear, what you eat and drink, or how you spend your free time—does the Bible address those things? While it is true that the Bible doesn't specifically list every possible decision you'll face in life, it does address all choices with principles that govern Christian freedom. When you run your choices through the following grid of principles from God's Word, you'll find both clarity and true freedom to live your life to God's glory. Will it benefit me spiritually? "All things are lawful, but not all things are profitable. All things are lawful, but not all things edify" (1 Corinthians 10:23). A "profitable" thing is useful, helpful, or to your advantage to do; and the idea behind "edify" is to build up spiritually?" If not, you spiritually. So based on this verse, ask yourself, "Will doing this enhance my spiritual life? Will it cultivate godliness? Will it build me up should seriously question whether that behavior is the best choice. More to come; Happy New Year & Welcome to H.C.C.
